

ECH AUTUMN MEETING - 15/16 NOVEMBER 2019

ECH's autumn meeting 2019 will take place in Paris. It will be organised by the Société Savante d'Homéopathie (SSH) and under the patronage of the Fédération Nationale des Sociétés Médicales Homéopathiques de France (FSMHF).

Friday 15 November will be fully dedicated to a conference about the role of homeopathy to tackle antimicrobial resistance (AMR). Top international lecturers will give a broad view of the topic, its various implications and its possible developments.

Jennifer Jacobs, epidemiologist at Washington University, Leonie Bonamin, researcher at Sao Paulo University, Lex Rutten, Dutch epidemiologist, Italian paediatrician Francesco Macri and the Dutch veterinarian Liesbeth Ellinger and the French Bernard Poitevin have confirmed their participation.

The range of researchers participating ensures that multiple aspects of the topic will be covered accurately: individualized treatments of recurrent infections, generalized treatments of epidemics, alternatives to the overuse of antibiotics on herd animals and its ecological impact.

Moreover, understanding of the topic will be deepened thanks to work on evaluative methods and the prejudices held towards available medical alternatives which are detrimental.

On Saturday 16 November the subcommittees will gather to continue our ongoing projects.

All details are below, please use the registration form to notify your attendance and to book your meals and social events.

We all look forward to welcoming you in Paris.
